The Production of Salt

The largest salt producing State is Michigan, yet less than fifty years ago, when the East Saginaw Sait Manufacturing Company asked the Michigan legislature for a bounty of 10 cents a barrel on salt made in the State, the enterprise was regarded humorously. A member of the legislature moved the adoption of an amendment making the bounty 10 cents a bushel, and it was adopted. The bill was changed to its original text, however, before it was passed, and the State first year. The case went to the highest used to-day. court before settlement was secured. In Kansas, rock salt is mined directly, as well as produced from wells in the form of brine. Louisiana now contemplates suicide. rock salt is mined, and great galleries extend under the earth, some of them being 200 feet long, 75 feet wide, and 65 feet deep. Texas produces a considerable quantity of salt by evaporating the water of lagoons on the Gulf Coast, and from wells located mostly in Van Zandt and Anderson counties. In New Mexico, Idaho, Utah, and Nevada are many shalow lake basins from which salt is made hy simple evaporation. Since the Salton Sink has been flooded, California's only production of this commodity in comme cial quantities is from sea water evap-orated under peculiarly favorable condi-tions on the east side of San Francisco

A salt-trade fight that benefited the consumer was one waged among Kansas. Ohio, and New York for the control of the sale of ground rock salt. A Cleveland business man who loved a trade fight for its own sake determined to achieve supremacy in this market. He decided that housekeepers were not in terested in cut prices on a commodity so cheap as sait had grown, and he set out to improve the quality. To his efforts and those of his competitors are due the fact that America now has table salt that does not clog in the cruet. At the Columbian Exposition he exhibited this product in an immense hour glass, through which it run like dry sand.

The United States became the leading salt-producing country in 1897, outranking Great Britain by 5 per cent. The following year the United States gained and Great Britain lost in production, and in 1899 the United States' increase was nearly eight times as much as that of her rival. While the production of the various countries fluctuates, the United States is well ahead at present, with large undeveloped resources. Because of the low prices obtained at the works, the fuel question determines largely the profit in salt-making in this country. In Michigan the sait and lumber interests have long been allied, and the fuel used has been, to a great extent, sawdust and other mill offal, the removal of which would put the lumberman to actual expense if it were not so disposed of. In Pomeroy, Ohio, salt works are situated at the entrance of coal mines, and consume unselable slack, thus saving a great deal of expense. Where more

"Not worth his salt" is an expression that dates back to the days of the Roman empire. But few persons use the word "salary" with the knowledge that it means "salt money." The word is derived from the Latin "salarium argentum." Each Roman soldier and each military and civil official traveling in government service was allowed a ration of salt or the equivalent in cash. Frequently the salarium argentum of the official was expanded to the proportions of a legislator's stationery account, and from the refused payment when a bounty on 4,000 Roman soldier's ration and the Roman barrels was claimed at the end of the official's graft originated "salary" as it is
